

Here's Barbie as you've never seen her before: as a victim of domestic abuse.

A student artist has painted black eyes, bruises and blood onto the faces of the iconic dolls. Sam Humphreys said she wanted to show the difference between how children view the world and its much darker realities.

Her project, It's A Matter Of Trust, has the tagline 'We shouldn't be taught that life is perfect.'

She said: 'The dolls are part of a project demonstrating how reality actually is and that life isn't perfect.' 'I was interested in how, when we're younger, we're led to believe that everything is perfect and how as children we are quite rightly sheltered from the harsh realities of adulthood.'

Sam, 41, who is studying a degree in Contemporary Art and Design at the Writtle School of Design in Chelmsford, Essex, used ten dolls for her project.

They range from some showing the iconic toy as bruised to some being sick and others being beaten to death. Three have been selected for a display at Leicester University called Speaking Out which looks at depictions of violence against women in art.

This exhibition explores how survivors can overcome their traumatic experiences and promote a positive view of women's forms of resistance and empowerment through art.

Sam herself argues that the only way domestic violence can be stamped out is by teaching children about respect from an early age.

She added: 'Using Barbie is a nice way of using a toy that everyone recognizes as an imagine of perfection and undercutting that.'